Great Racing for the New York Yacht Club.

The Grayling, Dauntless and Adelaide Were the Other Winners.

Commodore Elbridge T. Gerry's handsome steam-yacht Electra left the pier at the foot of West Twenty-third street early this morning with a select party of yachtamen and newspaper men on board and steamed down the river with colors a-flying.

She was bound for Sandy Hook, where her owner was to take a prominent part in the annual fall regatta of the New York Yacht 'Club, which is being sailed to-day for the first time over the " outside " course.

For this reason, as well as the fact that the relative merit and sailing qualities of some of relative merit and sailing qualities of some of the fastest akimmers in these waters are to be tested for the first time, particular interest centres in the event among yachting enthusiasts, and a day of fine sport is anticipated. The big fleet of excursion steamers, steam yachts, sailing vessels and tugs to accompany the racers around the course also left the city early this morning with loads of passengers, and it was estimated that the spectators of the contest would number at least three thousand. Several of the yachts anchored at Bay Ridge went down last night to Sandy Hook, with parties of joliy yachtsmen aboard so as to be on haud early this morning and in readiness for the race, which was started at 11.30 o'clock.

It was a matter of comment that so few yachts had entered for the contest the number of entries at the close yesterday, being only ten. As they included, however, some of the crack yachts of the club, this fact did not interfere with the prospect of good sport. The entries were as follows:

The principal race of the day was between the shops Kathrina and Shamrock, the former being the best effort of its designer, Mr. Cary Smith, while the latter is the Corinthian design of its owner, J. Rogers Maxwell.

Sanny Hoox, 10.30.—A fog and a calm prevailed in the earlier morning, but at 9.30 o'clock the sun stole out and drove the fog away. Then a light southwesterly wind gradually came along and at 10 o'clock it had a velocity of eight miles an hour, with a prospect of increasing. pect of increasing.
At 10.15 it blew more to the eastward, and

It is now blowing eleven miles an hour.

It is cloudy off shore and but few of the yachts are anywhere near the starting point, though the Grayling and the Kathrina are in the Narrows heading down the bay. The remainder of the fleet are in their of them towing.

10:45.—The flagship has taken her position.

11:10—The yachts are clustered around the starting point, forming a heautiful picture.

The sea is smooth as a pond, though the breeze from the southeast still continues.

The Katrina was the first to cross the line at 11.31.05. followed by the Dauntless twenty seconds later, Fanny twenty-five seconds after, Alarm twenty-two seconds after, Shamrock, 11.32.58, and Adelaide at 11.35.50. The Wizard was next, at 11.37, and the Magic followed her.

Wizard was next, at 11.87, and the Magic followed her.

11.50—The Katrina passed the buoy at 11.48.5; Dauntless at 11.49.

11.58.—Other yachts have passed the buoy as follows: Fauny at 11.50, Alarm at 11.50.45, Shamrock at 11.51.25, Grayling at 11.53.40, Adelaide at 11.56.20.

Among the many steam yachts and saiting craft which accompanied the racers out, besides the Electra with Commodore Gerry and his friends, were C. M. Brown's Fedalma, the Onelda, with her owner, E. C. Benedict; The Boston schooners Marguerite and Plone, the cutter Huron and the yachts Elma and Vision.

The two iron steamers Taurus and Cepheus

The two iron steamers Taurus and Cepheus were also in the wake of the fleet with the guests of the New York Yacht Club and a crowd of good-natured excursionists on board.

Everything was favorable both for sight-Beers and yachismen.

As the racers passed the point they caught the freshening breeze from the southeast, which sent the sloops careening over as they started out for the lightship on the port tack, while the schooners stood up as straight as a pikestaff.

while the schooners stood up as straight as a pikestaff.

The Troubadour was the only one of the ten entries which did not show up, and the cause of her failure to put in an appearance could not be ascertained.

12.11.—The Wizard passed the buoy at 12.02 and the Magic at 12.10.50.

There was a fresh breeze blowing and the flyers came down towards the point at a rattling pace.

On the reach down towards the Sandy Hook Lightship, most of the yachts maintained their same relative positions, as far as could be observed, with the Katrina and Dauntless well in the lead. The Shamrock was working up towards the front gradually and bettering her position in the race with the Katrina about half way down.

Two of the sloops went about on the port tack and made for the lightship, while the rest stood off shore.

12.46—The leading racers rounded the lightship in the following order:

Katrina, 12.40.28: Shamrock, 12.45: Grayling, 12.45.30. Wind twenty miles an hour, and the yachts churning the water into big rollers of foam as they round the lightship and jump away on the opposite tack for the stakeboat off the Shrewsbury rocks.

The fact that the grand race of the day is to be between the Katrina and Shamrock is now pretty well established, and the chances seemed to be very nearly equal.

12.55.—The Dauntless turned the lightship at 12.52 and the Fanny at 12.54. Weather getting thick in the southwest. Hard to tell what the numbers are.

1 r. m.—Adelaide turned the lightship at 12.59.30. The Grayling gained eleven minutes on their and the wind is still freshening. The Grayling has passed the Shamrock and stands to win m her class.

The yachts are still in sight, standing down the coast, and the wind is still freshening. The Grayling has passed the Shamrock and has taken second place.

The Katrina still maintains her lead. The old Dauntless is leading in her class, but is a good distance behind the crack flyers.

When the yachts rounded the point at Sandy Hook they had up all the extra canvas that could be crowded, especially the schooners, which had set their forestaysails and main topmast staysails, and the sloops with their club topsails set. On the way out many of the yachts took in their lofty canvas, but most of the sloops, including the Katrina, Fanny and Shamrock, were still salling under their club topsails when they were running down the beach, about opposite Seabright.

There was a large attendance, and as the favorite, Sam Harper, jr., won the first event, and a strong second chance Bessie June, the second race, all hands seem to be thoroughly enjoying hemselves.

The real interest in the day's racing laid in the result of the Algeria Stakes, for which Mr. Withers started the Faverdale colt. The all black was a big favorite, and the Faverdale colt won, but not as easily as some would have liked to have seen. > ISPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD. Boston, Sept. 20. - John L. Sullivan, king of pugilists, may tossing and moaning on a bed of pain last night at the Orient Cottage Crescent Beach.

Then, and not until then, did thoughts of the future trouble John L. Sullivan. His early training at home at the hands of a fond mother had been forgotten in the whiri and intoxication of the plaudits of multitudinous admirers in the prize ring; the woman who reared Boston's best specimen of physical development, and who on many an occasion had stuck by him when all others had turned their backs, sat by his bedside smoothing his brow.

The unfortunate turn came and Mrs. Sullivan rose to summon the attendants. Hurriealy messengers were despatched for physicians and priests.

The companion of the pugilistic champion on his tour through Furope, Annie Livingston, was the first to reach the He turned his head and couch. motioned her near. She came, and couch. He turned his head and motioned her near. She came, and John's mother was now a second personage in the eyes of the champion. His hands and feet began to get cold and all thought that the end was nigh.

Big tears trickled down the face of the old mother, who knelt by the bedside praying for her boy. Annie Livingston, too, seemed deeply affected, and gazed with an anxious look on the proud champion of two continents. No doubt she loves John L. Did she not, it is hardly probable she would have accompanied him to England. Did she not, it is hardly probable she would have nursed him in his present illness.

At length one of the priests came and all bowed their heads as the reverend man approached the bed. He looked at John, then at the poor old mother and finally at Annie, then motioned all to leave the room. They complied with his request and he was alone with the champion.

Sullivan was conscious, but weak. He recognized the clergyman.

"Who is this young woman, John, that has just left the room?" asked the priest.

Sullivan hesitated. He did not wish to tell the priest of the exact relations that existed between him and Annie Livingston, but finally he mustered up courage and admitted that she was his misiress.

"You must send her away," said the priest.

"I cannot and will not," replied the pu-priest. "I cannot and will not," replied the pugilist. The clergyman pleaded for some time with John, but it was no use. Sullivan's last words to the priest concerning this woman were: "Annie Livington has been a true friend to me in time of trouble; she has stuck to me when others who were nearer gave me the cold shoulder; she has nursed me kindly the last three weeks, and I don't propose to go back on her now."

The other clergymen who called also used their persussive powers on the champion to send Annie away, but the sick man was ob-durate.

their persuasive powers on the champion to send Annie away, but the sick man was obdurate.

At 9 o'clock this morning he was resting very easy, but his condition has not changed. The sick champion had a bad night of it, so his attendants reported this morning. He was very restless and not until about 6 o'clock this morning did he begin to sleep soundly. About 10 o'clock last night John was feeling better, but his father who was summoned early in the evening, remained with him till 7 o'clock this morning.

The physician attending John is still confident that he will be all right again within six or seven weeks, and then he will be a better man than before.

As soon as he has sufficiently recovered he will be taken to the Hot Springs in Arkansas, where he will stay a month. Then he will take a trip to Texas or Mexico, and remain in that section for a month or more.

It was reported last night that the big fellow had a bad hemorrhage, but the nurse denies that such was the case. All the food that is given him he retains on his stomach, which, the physician says, is a good sign that the stomach is getting better.

As nourishment the champion is given extract of beef every few hours. An hour after taking the beef he is given a white pill.

In an hour he takes a drink of milk and soda, and an hour afterwards he is given a speciful of black mixture.

From the time he became sick until Monday he had been taking chicken broth. The physician has ordered the nurse not to give him any more of it, as it brought on a bad diarrhosa.

The sick champton has good courage, and at times he laughs and jokes with the persons in the room.

BALL GROUNDS, LOUISVILLE, Sept. 20. —A heavy shower early this morning has left the ground a ittle damp, but in good condition.

Tom Esterbrook came in from Indianapolis last night, and this morning signed with Louisville. He will play at first this afternoon. As he is in the pink of condition, in perfect training, and says he has always wanted to play with Louisville, he ought to give the team an extra chance to take the game. But Louisville's luck is bad. On account of the absence of Caruthers and Burns, Fouts is forced to go into thejbox and Clark in right field. As Clark has played the position only once before that point is likely to be weak. A crowd of about eight hundred is present.

The weather is torestening, but the game will probably go to a finish.

The players go on sa follows:

DAY SAYS NINE GAMES,

The Giants' President Talks of the Verid's Championship Series. John B. Day, President of the New York Base-ball Club, got home from the Smoky City this afternoon and was almost buried behind a ponderous pile of papers at his office when an EVENING World reporter came upon him.

Beyond being a shade or two darker than when he went away, Mr. Day looked as natural as ever, which may be due to the fact that he has given up it ing awake nights trying to guess which club wilk win the pennant.

"I left the boys in first-rate shape," said the baseball magnate, stroking his mustache and forcing fragrant rings of smoke from a Reina Victoria towards the ceiling. "Ewing and Ward are a little under the weather, to be sure, but the rest of the players are in prime condition."

"Have you decided to play a series of games for the world's championship with the St. Louis Browns?"

"Well, no, not exactle," replied Mr. Day. "I haven't seen Mr. You der Abe in some time and nothing definite has been done in the matter. I think, however, that an arrangement of the kind will undoubtedly be made. I am not willing to play more than nine games, at any rate, and of these I suppose St. Louis and New York will each have three. The remaining games I am in favor of playing in bostoe, Brocklyn and Poliadelphia."

"But this is in direct condict with Mr. You der Abe's ideas."

"I know that, Mr. You der Abe desires to play eleven games, four in the East and the remainder in the West. I do not favor this plan at all. I think three games should be played in this city and the same number in St. Louis, but as for giving the West all of the others I don't agree."

"Does Chicago want one of the outside games;"

"I lou't think say, Anyway, it's a little out of the line, and I don't see how it could be arranged without serious inconvenience."

"Have you any idea when you will see the manager of the St. Louis Browns!"

"I have not, but there is plenty of time for that. Something defaits will probably be done within two or three weeks.

"While Mr. You Der Abe's views and mine are somewast different, I ishink that we can arrange the series satisfactorily."
